Says "Jazz House" Got Off Easy

case in which Keating said he was consulted was by the presiding judge. On cross examination Keating would not say he had heard that the judge who tried them had arranged that one should be tried and the other disposed.

Evidence purporting to show that a member of the staff of Dist. Atty. Tufts was a visitor at a Cambridge house raided as one of the trial today in connection with the charge that Mr. Tufts along with other alleged irregularities of official conduct neglected to prosecute certain persons. Atty. General Allen had endeavored unsuccessfully to introduce an address book found at the house in which he said the name of "J. Doyle, district office, Cambridge, 7042," appeared. He informed the court that the name was that of a member of district attorney's staff.

He called Lieut. Charles A. Wyman of the Cambridge police force to the stand. Lieut. Wyman said he had seen John Doyle in a drunken condition going into the house occupied by Lillian F. Howe, the house, he said was formerly occupied by "Brownie" Kennedy, who has previously figured in testimony before the court as keeper of a Michigan man, a Wabun road house. The defense objected to testimony in the Howe case as one of such recent origin that there had been no opportunity to prosecute.

When Lord Northcliffe Takes no Chances

One day Lord Northcliffe ascended from his own rooms on the main floor to the office, one of his principal papers, bringing in his hand a clipping from an evening paper which set forth how in a country village a motor car had knocked down and killed a child and had sped on its way regardless. The car could not be traced. He gave instructions that every measure of publicity should be engaged in finding the identity of the car. The story was written up in dramatic form. An offer of $3000 was made for anyone who could give facts as to the ownership of the car, and the best investigating journalist on the staff was sent down to the country to probe matters.

The almost malicious glee of the other papers in Fleet street may be imagined when it was found out through the instrumentality of Lord Northcliffe's papers that the car in question belonged to his brother, Hildebrand Harmsworth, having been taken out unknown to its owner by the chauffeur. Of course there was no more prominence in the Northcliffe papers about the matter, although rival journalists did not forget to emphasize the story, including the offer of the reward. Incidentally, it may be mentioned that Hildebrand Harmsworth, a very kindly man, was deeply shocked at the discovery and did all that a generous expenditure of money could do to meet the loss of the bereaved parents.

It was two weeks later that a murder mystery engaged the principal attention of the London papers. A murdered girl had been flung out of a train in a tunnel a few miles from London. The murderer could not be discovered. There was a consultation of department chiefs in Lord Northcliffe's office on the matter. Among other suggestions put forward was that a reward of $500 be offered for evidence.

"Five hundred dollars reward," said Lord Northcliffe thoughtfully. "But where was my brother Hildebrand that night?"—Outlook.

dead. Death was due to leakage of the heart.

Mr. Moulton was 75 years old and was born in Somerville, Mass. He was for many years a railway mail clerk running between Newport and Springfield. He retired from active service several years ago. He was supposed to have been in fairly good health and his death comes as a great shock to his family and friends.

The funeral will be held Friday, probably at G. A. R. hall at West Burke.

Walked Up the Mt. Washington Railway

Fred C. Beck, John A. Beck, F. M. Byl and F. E. Sampson recently took a trip to Mt. Washington, going in Mr. Byl's car to the base of the mountain and walking the rest of the way. They walked up the cog railway in two hours and 30 minutes, keeping ahead of the regular train. This railroad is 3.4 miles long with a rise of 1,000 feet from the summit to the base. After viewing the buildings on the summit and looking off through the faint haze they walked to the Lake in the Clouds, a distance of nearly two miles and then followed the Ammonoosuc trail as it wound down the steep mountain, crossing and re-crossing the brook that is the source of this river. On their way down they saw very distinct traces of the slide of about a year ago, when tons of earth and trees slid into one of the big gorges of the mountain side.

The highway up the mountain is 15 miles long and two big automobiles made the trip the day the St. Johnsbury party was there.

The 10th birthday of Lois Goodwin was celebrated Saturday at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Goodwin, on Main street. Eleven of her young friends were present, one for each year and one for good luck, and a very happy occasion is reported. Refreshments were served, and several appropriate remembrances were received.
